- I can solve complicated math problems and help people with their math.

What works for me

- My desk in the back of the room away from the door.
- Writing on the computer or writing in cursive
- Sitting by Chris or Tyler
- Telling me if there are changes to the schedule
- Brain breaks when I get done with my assignment
- Give me time to tell jokes or share my favorite Calvin and Hobbes pages
- Working alone on my assignments

What doesn't work for me

- My desk in front where everyone is looking at me.
- Expecting eye contact all the time. I am listening and that just makes me mad
- Noises that I don't expect and unexpected changes
- Rushing me (prior notice is needed so I can shift my brain)
- Intramural games and unorganized games in PE

A great day

My dad drives me to school and my mom takes my sister. We listen to the radio instead of getting peppered with 1000 questions about life. I get to school and learn there is no more PE classes for the rest of the year. The teachers in all my classes give us relevant information so it's actually interesting and goes by fast. I see all the guys because it's a circle of friends meeting day and we role play a new social skill like not yelling at chairs when we walk into them. In English class my grammar worksheets are transported to my laptop and all work is done on my computer. Hot lunch is cheese pizza, french fries, and a root beer float. I get home and play with Reggie (my dog) because there is no homework. I go to the park with my RC car until dinner and don't need to take my sister. The rest of the night is Minecraft and there is no time limit. Intramural games and unorganized games in PE.
